

Magazine hit

A GROUP of intrepid young ice hockey fans could soon be rivalling the might of the Guardian sports columns thanks to their own top-class magazines.

The handful of fans, most of them in their teens, hit upon the idea of designing and writing their own magazine when they heard that sponsorship was desperately needed last year to support their favourites at the Lea Bridge Road, Leyton, rink. Profits from their efforts helped pay the way of the imported idols at the rink.

Their shot in the dark on a risky venture proved a quick winner, and now the ice hockey news, views and interviews that comprises each impressive read ensure that copies are snapped up at each home game.

Match facts, guest player columnist and their own unique brand of humour go into it. It is printed on an ancient duplicator at the home of 16-year-old editor Mike Grafton. He is helped by Bill Freeman, Kevin Salih, Dasve Smythe and Ron Clark.

Said 17-year-old Dave: "About six of us are regularly involved with the magazine, we all met at the ice hockey and love the game.
